ARE ALL FAT CATS TOO BIG TO JAIL?

We never thought that we would quote from an old news source in Somalia about crime in another country in the world according to Transparency International.

According to Somalia Online, Salvatore Ferranti, an Italian mafia boss, was released from jail in 2008 after accommodating him because he weighed 462 lbs. He was eventually put under house arrest instead because

What is interesting is this may be becoming a “huge” trend. Our investigations led us to another example in Florida, who would have dismissed Salvatore Ferranti as a light weight. Jolicoeur was arrested in 2010 for ten one gallon drums of ice cream he had bought were damaged. He had previous form for similar food

Now in isolation these two examples of incidents where someone is too fat to jail would not normally be thousands of rumours that several fat cat or simply fat bankers, brokers, financiers et al should have been

We noted when undertaking a Google Search for “too big to jail” that we got about 3,310,000 results. More really that many bankers who are too big to jail?

We conducted more analysis on Google: “fat cat bankers” got about 754,000 results, “fat cat financiers” got about 754,000 results respectively but “fat cats” got about 2,800,000 results.

There is clearly a discrepancy somewhere or our logic may be slightly flawed but it would appear that none have gone to jail yet for the systemic mayhem they caused over the last decade or so!

Our suggestion to Governments facing economic stagnation resulting from all the financial crises over the last decade or so is to invest in infrastructural projects – in particular they could build “mammoth” new prisons or zoos to house those who
